The destructive potential of solar plasma isn't actually all that great, unless you can produce Sun-scale quantities of the stuff. While the temperature is very high, the heat is really small; ...

Normally I'd wait for the price to stabilize before rating; but chances are the price of this item will only continue to drop given the lackluster power it represents. The icon types aren't horrible, but, they ...

In conclusion, while flare guns can theoretically be used for self-defense, their effectiveness is severely limited compared to other available options. They are primarily designed for signaling rather than ...

Instead, the flare gas can be used directly to generate electricity. The ability of the SMT60 to burn wellhead gas with minimal treatment produces a double dip in emissions: it ...

Capturing for sale or using it to run an on-site generator or something is best, but the economics of that often don't make sense, because cleaning and transporting gas is fairly expensive.

Flare guns aren't just about firepower--they're also about fire light. These little launchers blast pyrotechnic signals high into the sky, burning bright enough to be spotted from miles out.

This can result in the sudden release of electromagnetic energy in the form of a solar flare; which typically accompanies the explosive acceleration of plasma away from the Sun - the CME.

At less than the cost of most home insurance deductibles, EMP Shield will safeguard your house or apartment from a powerful lightning strike as well as a solar flare.

When the flare is fired from a specialized flare gun, the first stage ignites, propelling the flare to an altitude of around 1,000 feet. At this point, the second stage ignites, causing the flare to ...
